Closing Out Summer & Thinking Of Fall

July and August are always the hottest parts of the summer - and this year has been no exception.

Your house has made it through some rough heat in 2021, but is there anything you need to worry about in this final stretch of summer heat?

Your roof has protected you, your family, and your property well through the heat. You don't only have to worry about direct heat and summer - you also need to consider the transitions in weather as we approach Fall.

From your vantage point on the ground or from the inside of your home, there is no way to tell if you have a roofing problem until it is much too late! A roof inspection can only be safely and thoroughly completed by an expert like us - so give us a call today!

Beat The Heat Through The End of Summer

While we usually look forward to the warmth of summer, right about now is when we are anxious for a bit of a cool weather break. Let's talk about a few tips and tricks to help you beat the heat through the end of summer and how your roof can help!

- Power Down Electronics Whenever Possible - Computers and TVs (and other less efficient electronics) can throw off a lot of heat when left on and unattended. Unplugging those electronics can help you slightly drop the temperature in your home.
- Know Your Body's Cooling Points - A cool, damp washcloth placed at common places on your body where your pulse can be taken (like your wrist and neck) can help to quickly cool you down.
- Your Roof Impacts Your Energy Bill - New roofs do a great job of protecting your home's structure and being a buffer to keep the outside elements at bay. As your roof ages, this buffer starts to break down. Without proper care, your roof will break down over time. This leaves your property more open to air exchange and water penetration. That means more of the outside air permeating your property, which leads to an increase in your energy spending. Proper roof care, or a replacement when necessary, can help you to keep your energy costs in check.
